"We looked a little stronger in a number of events and the sprints got a lot better," head coach Dean Hayes said. "Adade and Greg Franklin both had good days and Sloss is staying steady, as is the women's 400's. We're getting better in a number of events, staying steady, and that's a big plus as far as I'm concerned." Both Middle Tennessee teams head to Lexington, Ky., next weekend for the Rod McCravy Memorial at Nutter Fieldhouse on the University of Kentucky campus.
